

This fall, like every fall, a team of cops and paramedics will ride through our communities. They'll visit us at our schools and at our businesses. They'll speak at our events and spend time with our kids. And they'll do it all to help children with cancer. For almost two weeks, they'll travel over a thousand kilometers on challenging terrain and through unpredictable weather in the Canadian Cancer Society's Cops for Cancer Tours.

And when they ride through our community, we'll be there to cheer them on. We'll shave our heads, host events, and do almost anything to raise money, help spread the message, and show support for our local cancer survivors and fighters. Then we'll feed them, thank them for their hard work, and send them on their way to the next community. And the money we raise together will go to important childhood cancer research and amazing support programs like Camp Good Times. This year, we'll show the Cops for Cancer that we appreciate what they're doing and let them know the enormous difference they make in the lives of children fighting cancer.

Join your community to fight back against childhood cancers by supporting a rider, hosting an event, or making a donation. Fundraising events can start now, so get planning. Visit copsforcancerbc.ca to learn more.
